

Verandah Music showcases for the first time the richness and diversity of the roots of traditional Australian music.

Written with warmth and passion, the combination of candid interviews, historical photographs and two compact discs, brings to life the traditions, contexts, working lives and family connections of a remarkable community of musicians.

The editors, Graham Seal and Rob Willis, are joined by twenty contributors from across the country — each with a long involvement in documenting verandah music. They include professional folklorists, performers, collectors and producers, writers, scholars and teachers.

Features two CDs of selected verandah music archival and performance pieces, mastered by the National Library of Australia.
